

Atlas of Life in the Coastal Wilderness

exploring, learning, recording

Interested in knowing more about wildlife living in our area?

Want to contribute to citizen generated science?

The Atlas of Life in the Coastal Wilderness is a community organised project to create a database of biodiversity in our region. It encourages everyone to spend time in nature and learn about ecology and biodiversity.

Come along to this workshop with Libby Hepburn, the coordinator of the Atlas of Life in the Coastal Wilderness and learn how to record sightings of species via the Naturemapr app and your tablet or smartphone.

Recorded sightings from the Atlas are uploaded to the national database, Atlas of Living Australia.

Come and find out how to become one of the hundreds of contributors from round Australia who are building the Atlas of Living Australia, a national biodiversity database.

This will be a 'hands on' workshop.

Please bring your smartphone or tablet.

Once you confirm attendance, we will provide guidance on downloading the Naturemapr App and any other preparation necessary for the workshop.

The morning will involve both a learning session inside, a walk outside to practice using the application and morning tea.
